Why I'm A Vegetarian

This Saskatoon schoolteacher explains why he will not eat meat, and why he is raising his three children in the same dietary tradition, with, he believes, benefits to their over-all state of health. The article is taken from a script prepared for presentation on PRAIRIE TALKS

by WILLIAM STRATFORD

THERE'S A FRIEND of mine in Saskatoon who persists, of all things, in offering me chicken dinners—with all the trimmings, of course—and once, he was rash enough to promise me the biggest steak in town. Each time I've smiled weakly and thanked heaven he was the sort of chap who was all talk and no do. Why? Because I'm a vegetarian.

"You're a what?"

"I'm a vegetarian."

"You mean you don't eat meat?"

"No, I don't eat meat."

"How about fish?"

"No, I don't eat fish."

"Well, surely you eat chicken?"

"No, I don't eat chicken either."

"Good Lord, what on earth do you live on? Grass?"

Here there usually comes a titter and the suggestion I should live down a rabbit hole. But since nearly everyone is convinced I'm a crank who subsists on potatoes and boiled cabbage—a creature to be glanced at in pity and then forgotten—I let the comment go and pick up another carrot.

However, there's a lot more to being a vegetarian than taking wisecracks from beefy, bone-cracking, marrow-sucking, ham-and-eggs-for-breakfast he-men. After all, what about Bernard Shaw? Any man who could quite seriously set about trying to take apostrophe commas out of English grammar, or attempt to persuade the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge that we should adopt a phonetic alphabet, must have had something a pork-chop-chewer lacks.

No doubt someone'll chip in here and tell me Shaw's doctors put him on liver extract to cure his anaemia. I know it! But look what happened. Three unstageable plays in a row.

Then he went back to grated celery and sauteed lettuce leaves and produced a masterpiece. In this world, results speak for themselves.

But wait a moment. If I continue being facetious you'll think I'm not sincere about vegetarianism. Nothing could be further from the truth. And certainly, when I first adopted a fleshless diet, I joined an illustrious company. Many famous indeed, many great men have advocated abstinence from flesh, fish or fowl.

For example? Well, there was the Lord Buddha, of course. And if that name offends in a Christian community, so did St. John Chrysostom and Clement of Alexandria. So did the Greeks, Plato, Pythagoras, Plutarch and Diogenes, the Roman giants Ovid and Seneca, Origen, the early mystic, the English poets Milton, Pope and Shelley, the needle-minded Voltaire and the idealistic Tolstoy.

So, too, did Sir Isaac Newton, who paved the way for modern astrophysics; that militant Methodist, John Wesley; and the gentle, peace-loving Mahatma Gandhi. Quite a collection of talent, don't you think? Could all of them have been wrong in their ideas?

Yet what were the precepts these vastly different persons held in common? In the past, of course, they were mainly ethical. In fact, it was ethical considerations which first drew me to the idea of doing without meat as a means of sustenance. Not that I didn't enjoy the taste of a steak dripping with blood and onion juice, or a tender chicken stuffed with chestnuts and just asking to be melted in the mouth. I did! I've drooled as much as anyone over such savory delights. But, like Albert Schweitzer, I began to realize a "reverence for life." I began to think of life as sacred.

Now, I don't just mean human life. I mean all life. In other words, since I'm unable to create a living creature that breathes and moves and has beauty of form and being, what earthly right have I to destroy one? Isn't there enough brutality and suffering in the world without my adding to the total? I want to enjoy life, without fear of exploitation, without fear of unnecessary pain, without fear of a sudden, cruel death. What normal human being doesn't? Then why shouldn't we extend that hope to animals?

But maybe you think this ethical approach is high-falutin' nonsense. Perhaps you want me to prove the point with science. Well, here are the facts.

The blood, flesh and fat of dead animals contain millions of dead and millions of live bacteria. Some of these are produced as the carcass begins to decompose . . . which it does almost immediately following death. But others were already present, from such animal diseases as contagious abortion, swine fever, foot and mouth disease, tuberculosis and cancer tumours. So the spare ribs you had for dinner were government tested and free of disease, were they? Can you be sure? Can you be quite, quite sure?

In any case, what do you get from meat? Mainly protein, isn't it? And since a pound of lima beans contains more protein than a pound of beef, giving that as a reason hardly holds water, does it?

Moreover, you and I have 30 feet of small intestine, specially designed for slow digestion. The truly carnivorous animals have very short bowels, so that all the toxic wastes from putrefying flesh can be eliminated quickly. In us, they hang around causing trouble.

You see, flesh is an end-product and breaks down by decomposition, whereas fruits, nuts and vegetables are digested by processes of fermentation. Now, if you overload yourself with foods which produce

AROUND CBC . . .

by The Editor

CANADA'S FIRST working TV set was built long before the average person had thought it could ever be possible to transmit pictures. Operating on a mechanical principle, it was invented by a young technician, Alphonse Ouimet, who today has risen to become president of the CBC.

Mr. Ouimet's television set, along with the gold microphone used by King George VI during the 1939 Royal Tour, an early wire tape recorder weighing half a ton, a gramophone, vintage 1908, and many other pieces from the history of broadcasting, will be on display in Winnipeg Feb. 6 to 11. To help publicize the CBC's travelling "Broadcast Museum," several radio and television shows will originate from Beaver Hall on the fourth floor of the Hudson's Bay Company store, where the display will be set up.

CBC WINNIPEG'S Lincoln television mobile unit was loaned to the National Broadcasting Corporation to assist in their international television coverage of the inauguration of President John F. Kennedy. The unit, a complete control room for operation of one television camera, is incorporated in a 23-foot-long Lincoln automobile. It is the only one of its kind in Canada, and one of four on this continent. John Gibson, CBWT's Supervisor of Technical Operations, accompanied the vehicle to Washington. The unit now has returned home, and will be on display in connection with the Broadcast Museum when it is in Winnipeg.

ONE OF THE PROGRAMS to be presented on the floor of the Broadcast Museum will be "Nice and Easy," featuring the Bob McMullin orchestra, Georges LaFleche and popular radio, television and night club performer Denyse Ange. Many will remember Denyse's appearance on the St. Patrick's Day program of the Ed Sullivan Show last spring.

ALTHOUGH MOST CBC drama production is handled in Toronto, Winnipeg will make a contribution to the network Wednesday, Feb. 8 of a delightful comedy suspense story, "Steak for the Heiress." The play has been adapted from the famous mystery story "Puzzle for Poppy," by Patrick Quinton.

Possibly one of the most technically complex dramas produced in this city, the production was complicated by a rambunctious but lovable member of the cast: Kiltie, a whopping St. Bernard. The sets by Peter Kaczmarek will be a tour de force of design: the limited confines of CBC Studio 41 must be able to contain all 11 changes of scenery. Despite the difficulties, the play operates on an average-sized budget.

On Q for Quest Tuesday

Half-Hour Holiday in Puerto Rico

"Q for Quest" takes us to the Festival Casals in Puerto Rico, following the footsteps of celebrated Canadian contralto Maureen Forrester. Filmed by the National Film Board, the half-hour program will be presented Tuesday, February 7

by JUNE GRAHAM

WHEN SPANISH 'cellist Pablo Casals, 84, visited his mother's homeland, Puerto Rico, a few years ago, he fell in love with the island, and stayed. Later he fell in love with a beautiful young Puerto Rican 'cellist, and married her. Now he is so much a part of the country, and has inspired its musical life so greatly, that Puerto Ricans are wondering how they got along before their adopted son came to live among them.

To honour this brilliant old master, the Puerto Rican government instituted the Festival Casals five years ago, which annually draws renowned artists from all over the world for three weeks of music.

Among them at the Festival last summer was distinguished Canadian contralto Maureen Forrester, described by a leading critic as "Canada's most precious natural resource since gold was discovered in the Klondike." She flew down with her husband (violinist-conductor Eugene Kash), her three small children and a nurse.

With them went a four-man crew from the National Film Board, and a ton of equipment, to make a record of Miss Forrester's Festival appearances, as well as of the family's visits with Casals, trips to the beach, jaunts around the island, and many aspects of the Festival which visitors don't usually see. They brought home a delightfully human, informal half-hour film which Q for Quest presents Tuesday night on CBC-TV. Production is by Roman Kroiter, whose two-part study of Glenn Gould was a CBC-TV highlight last year.

Most of the Festival concerts are held in the university on the edge of San Juan. In her appearances

Miss Forrester sang Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with Casals conducting, and Salve Regina by Scarlatti, with Alexander Schneider conducting. This was only the second known performance of Salve Regina in the last 200 years. It was lost for a long time and discovered just recently.

Problems of filming Miss Forrester's part in the concerts were complicated by a battery of 13 microphones cluttering up the stage, for the performances were televised, broadcast on radio, and recorded by a New York company, as well as filmed by the NFB. Three NFB movie cameras were used for simultaneous filming of the activities on stage and backstage, and the audience reaction.

To get Miss Forrester's impressions of the trip and the Festival Casals we put through a long-distance call to her at her home in Montreal on January 19. The operator told us she was not at home. She had just had a baby.

As she had sung at a concert a couple of days before, had re-

He Enabled the Blind to Read

Through a lifetime of heartbreak and sacrifice, Louis Braille pioneered the system of reading for the blind that now bears his name. His life story will be portrayed in the play, The Touch of Light, on G.M. Presents Sunday, Feb. 5

IN AN AGE of hero-worship, it is rather strange that hardly anyone seems to know much about Louis Braille. Of course we have all heard of the ingenious method of reading and writing for the blind which bears his name, but what of the man himself, and his dramatic struggle to open the world of learning to the sightless back in the early 1800's?

He doesn't even rate a listing of his own in the Encyclopedia Britannica. Yet in the exciting, tragic, frustrating and romantic events of his short life in France are all the ingredients of a spellbinding story. It will be told in a drama on General Motors Presents Sunday night on CBC-TV, to mark the opening of White Cane Week.

Stars are Stuart Hutchison as Braille, and Donald Eccles as Defau.

Adapted by the series' chief story editor, Leslie McFarlane, from a play by William Kendall Clarke, and titled The Touch of Light, it was videotaped last month. Production is by Paul Almond, who says "it was a moving and enlightening experience for everyone associated with the production. Like most people, we all started out thinking of the blind as different. We ended up believing that sighted people are often more blind than the sightless."

That was the conclusion that Louis Braille came to, as well.

It is only in the last 30 years or so that the Braille system has come into use all over the world. Ironically, it was the sort of instrument that cost Braille his sight, an awl, that he used to bring a touch of light to blind people. His family had been harness-makers for over 200 years. When he was three he went into his father's workshop to play one day, grabbed an awl and tried to imitate his father's sure

Heritage

The Indivisible Truth is the title of today's program. What is a nuclear reactor doing on the campus of a Baptist university that is noted for its divinity faculty? It expresses the conviction that all knowledge is suitable for a Christian to pursue. The story concerns a retired professor of philosophy who returns to the campus of McMaster University in Hamilton, Ont., for the opening of an atomic reactor laboratory. He looks back on his own days as a student and teacher, and comes to see that it is right that on one campus the same people should be building a chapel for the glory of God and a nuclear reactor to help unlock the secrets of God's universe.

The cast: Murry Matheson as Prof. Arthur Blakely and Myrna Nobleman as his wife Jessica. Others include Vernon Chapman and Don Francks.

Silents Please

Q for Quest

Experimental productions of a varied nature from Canada's most creative writers, composers, painters, musicians, performers and personalities. Regular host is Andrew Allan, and producer is Ross McLean.

"Festival in Puerto Rico." Last summer Canadian contralto Maureen Forrester was invited to perform at the Festival Casals, a music festival in Puerto Rico sponsored by the government in honour of Pablo Casals. Miss Forrester was accompanied by her husband, conductor Eugene Kash, and their three children Daniel, Gina and Paula. This program is a National Film Board film account of their journey and of the events leading to a performance at the Festival Casals. It is produced by Roman Kroiter, whose two-part study of Glenn Gould was acclaimed as one of last year's freshest television experiences.

CBWT—I Love Lucy

Tonight—"Ricky Needs An Agent." Lucy decides that Ricky needs an agent to negotiate for more money and cut down his personal appearances, so she appoints herself. The situation goes from bad to worse when Ricky's studio contract is cancelled.

One of England's most original personalities, noted poetess Dame Edith Sitwell will appear Tuesday on "Close-Up."

HALF-HOUR HOLIDAY

turned from a European tour on December 30, and was scheduled for a New York Town Hall recital on February 1, we found this hard to believe. But a call to her hospital room confirmed it. She told us happily that she had given birth to her fourth child on January 17, a seven-pound, 15-ounce girl called Linda Valerie.

We asked her to tell us about Casals. "He's a very human personality, and, like most really great men, a modest one," she said. "Everyone wants to meet him, and at first you think: 'Oh, I couldn't approach a man of that stature.' But he never refuses to see anyone or answer their countless questions. He reminds me of Bruno Walter in that way.

"He's amazingly young for his age. He has hands like a baby, a wonderful, childlike face and a clear skin. A pixie look, I'd say. He has a young man's sense of humour, and I think this helps to keep him young. Like Einstein.

"He dresses simply. He's not at all dapper, never without his pipe, and he wears a little straw hat. Of course he looks elegant in evening clothes, like all men. But usually he's so natural and ordinary looking.

ED SULLIVAN

hand on a piece of leather. The awl slipped and gouged his eye badly, blinding him. Shortly afterwards the sight in his other eye went, too.

When he was 10 he won a scholarship to the School for Blind Children in Paris, where he carried off first prize in every subject in his first year. Eventually he joined the staff as a teacher in return for his food, lodging and a mere pittance of salary, and also played the organ at St. Nicholas' Church for six francs a month.

The school was a wretched place, cramped, poorly equipped, where the sickness and death rate were high. From the time he went there, he devoted himself to finding a simple, sure way for the blind to read and write.

"The most wretched child in Paris, if he has even the sight of one eye, knows more than any of the blind," he said. "The answer to our problem lies in books, and until we can learn to read and write easily and quickly, we're condemned to ignorance."

After much painstaking trial and error he evolved a method for representing the letters of the alphabet and punctuation marks with combinations of tiny raised dots made by pressing an awl into a sheet of paper. It was simple, easy, cheap, and it could be used in any language. His blind pupils took to it as a gift from heaven, but the head of the school opposed it violently. To make it available to the sightless all over the world required the approval and assistance of influential sighted people. Braille spent 28 years trying to get it.

The Touch of Light is a moving account of his efforts, of his romance with a beautiful girl who encouraged him, and of the tragedy of his last few years.

It took his countrymen a century to get around to honouring him. In 1952 his body was moved from the graveyard in his native village of

Why Do You Like Music?

THE PSYCHOLOGY of music is the subject of Helmut Blume's latest Music to See series, beginning this week on CBC-TV's Explorations.

"Why do we like music?" asks Blume, an associate professor of music at McGill University and a frequent contributor to CBC radio and television programs. "This is something which sounds very simple but is really quite complicated."

During the three-part series, his fourth for CBC-TV which will be seen Wednesdays, Blume will discuss and illustrate, by using several composers' works, the underlying fundamentals of music as it affects the composer, the performer and the listener.

The first program deals with the composer and how he weaves various basic fundamentals into his work to create a piece of music with meaningful patterns.

"The composer doesn't merely embark on a stormy boatripe, without rudder or compass, every time he writes a piece of music," says Blume. "But he does reflect the dynamic principle of opposing forces inherent in all motion."

Blume illustrates this point by telling of an experience he once had during an Atlantic crossing by boat.

"There was a storm, the sea was very agitated, and the boat plunged about very disagreeably. I didn't feel too well and decided to go on deck for some fresh air. What I saw while looking at the heaving seas was marvelous.

"Huge waves rising seemingly from nowhere, gathering tremendous strength and purpose, rolling past with a fantastic determination, being resisted by other waves of equal force and purpose. Then, two or three or more of them clashing magnificently and merging with each other, subsiding and being reborn again somewhere else and starting off on a new path with the same determination.

"This awe-inspiring drama was taking place simultaneously on several levels as it were, with smaller waves within the huge ones doing the same thing, though in different directions, as the big fellows in a tremendous symphony of tension and abatement.

"It was perhaps the most musical experience I ever had. In fact, I think I learned to understand music better as a result of it. For the whole point of this seemingly chaotic and senseless drama was that it did have order and sense and purpose: namely, the logic and purpose of any interplay of dynamic forces.

"It seems to me that music, more than any other art or human activity, represents this exciting interplay, between 'questioning and resting.' The composer is intuitively aware and tries to recreate it on all levels. And if he is any good, his music, whether slow, or fast and furious, will reflect this process of rising and falling, of breathing, of conflict and contrast, of being, and dying, and being reborn."

Composers, says Blume, consider themselves first and foremost artisans and craftsmen. But when listening to music, a person is not concerned with the technical data, which is absorbed unconsciously.

"We are concerned only with the emotional associations which the music arouses in us, with the ideas the composer seems to communicate to us."

Throughout the three programs Blume will illustrate his explanations by playing piano selections by such composers as Haydn, Bach, Chopin, Beethoven and Brahms.

The series is produced by Daryl Duke, who also produced Blume's last two TV series.

Budd Knapp Returns to Canada

After two years in England, and various absences that have taken him to Hollywood, actor Budd Knapp has returned to Canadian radio and television

A NAME THAT rings familiar to thousands of Canadian radio listeners has returned to the roster of CBC actors. After an absence of two years, Budd Knapp is back in Canada and is making his home in Montreal. He was expected to take an important role in "The School Friend," a production this week on CBC Wednesday Night.

Knapp recently returned to Canada from England where he has been working for the past two years in radio, television, films, and on the stage.

It is typical of Knapp that although certain highlights of his stay in England stand out vividly in his memory, other assignments which a less seasoned performer would have considered "plums" have fallen into that limbo to which a truly professional actor's routine chores are relegated.

He is, therefore, somewhat startled when occasionally he finds his own rugged face staring at him from his picture tube during the course of The Four Just Men or some other program he had forgotten about.

On the other hand, he says he will never forget such things as his associations with people like Dame Sybil Thorndike, with whom he played a featured role in a television performance of A Matter of Age. "She is quite unbelievable," says Knapp. "At 76 she talks about her next trip to Africa with the enthusiasm of a woman of 30. And her demonstration of a 'method' actor at work simply removes method acting from the face of the earth."

"In England they rehearse a television play about twice as long as in Canada or the States," Knapp explained, "so for three weeks Dame Sybil presided over us, telling anecdotes about plays she was in so long ago that she had forgotten the titles. But she did remember that in one of them she played a queen, and that her train was carried by two 'darling little boys' called Larry Olivier and Carol Reid!"

One thing that surprised Knapp a little in England was the atmosphere of "civilized competence" that pervaded commercial television as much as it did the BBC. "Professionally, England must be the most pleasant place in the world. This air of unhurried efficiency may not always be entirely justified, but it is very agreeable. The concern in England is with the job itself, not just its commercial result."

One of Knapp's last big roles in England was in a feature film, Never Take Sweets from a Stranger, which has not yet been released in Canada. Although he has never seen any of the Hollywood films in which he has appeared (he wasn't interested), he

Hermann Goering's Friend

ALTHOUGH HE speaks no lines, the person referred to in the title of Mario Simmel's The School Friend is in every other sense a real character in the play.

He is Hermann Goering, chief of the Gestapo in Nazi Germany in the first half of the 1930's, and an old school friend of Ludwig Fuchs, and the main character in Simmel's story, which will be presented this week on CBC Wednesday Night.

Fuchs, shocked by the Nazis' treatment of the Jews (he has to hide his teenage daughter's boyfriend from the SS troops), writes a letter to his old school friend: "... We are committing too many

This week, "Ewelme." Ewelme in Oxfordshire is one of those typically English villages which lie away from the main roads in gently rolling country, but its fame is greater than its size would suggest, partly because of its flourishing watercress industry, and partly because in Ewelme church are the tombs of some of the Chaucer family. Arthur Bush tells about the Ewelme Foundation, which comprises the church, the almshouses and the village school, all built over 500 years ago but still in use today. The post office, the manor house, and the watercress beds will be described.

PROJECT '61

Second of a four-part series entitled "The God That Failed." Today English poet and literary critic Stephen Spender recalls the mood of his early, short-lived flirtation with Communism, compares it with the mood of today, and indicates what are, for him, the dangerous softspots in the attitudes of the West.

Spender is the son of the well-known liberal writer, Edward Harold Spender. He was born in 1900 and educated in Switzerland and at University College, Oxford, where, with Day Lewis and W. H. Auden, he began to write poetry.

When he was caught up in the political unrest of the 'thirties he published Forward From Liberalism (1937) and shortly after joined the Communist Party for a brief time, but quickly became fed up.

"Within even a good social cause there is a duty to fight for the pre-eminence of individual conscience," he says, "and the individual must not be swallowed up by the concept of social man."

Theatre Du Dimanche

"Quand la moisson sera courbée" is the title of the Television theatre to be presented on "Theatre Du Dimanche," Channel 6, Sunday evening at 9:30 p.m. Alberta-born Roger Sinclair, who wrote it, has situated the action in a Saskatchewan farm in the drought period. It is the story of five women, who live alone in an isolated region, trying to make good on the barren land left them by their husband and father. Their problems are made even more complicated since they are a family of immigrants from the Ukraine. Karina, the youngest of the four daughters, will marry a no-good vulgar bachelor in order to escape from that painful and inextricable stigma of "immigrant."

"Quand la moisson sera courbée" was first presented in 1957 at the National Drama Festival and won for its author the trophy attributed to the best play West of Quebec province. The following year, La Comédie Canadienne staged another presentation which was acclaimed as one of the best plays of the year.

Gabrielle Roy on Premier Plan

Sometime in 1944, after returning from a trip to Europe, Gabrielle Roy was pacing the populated St-Henri neighbourhood of Montreal, when she got the idea for her first novel: "Bonheur d'occasion."

During an interview that was filmed recently in Montreal, Gabrielle

Roy will tell Judith Jasmin of her younger days in St. Boniface, her drama debut with the Cercle Molière and her studies in France and England. She will speak of her past works and her life as a Canadian author. Her novels, "La Petite Poule d'eau," "Alexandre Chenevert" and "Rue Deschambault" speak eloquently of her prodigious talent for description.

less reading and writing when he was 15. Obviously an hour-long drama couldn't begin to cover all the years between then and his death at 43 and the posthumous acceptance of the Braille system. "So," says Paul Almond, "we made use of poetic license and had Braille originate his method at a later age."

McFarlane was so anxious to make his portrait of Braille live up to the quality of the man that even when rehearsals were underway he was re-writing scenes and changing them around until he felt his words and situations had the right dramatic impact.

"I think what we were trying to convey," he says, "can be summed up in the remark of one of Braille's prize pupils after his death, when she said: 'He will need no monument. It is engraved wherever the fingertips of the blind seek knowledge.'"

One of the best scenes in the play was deliberately left unscripted so the actors could ad lib it—the one where Braille shows his students his new system of writing with dots. Both Almond and McFarlane feel that the spontaneity of the actors' remarks heightens the emotion of the scene considerably.

Almond is high in his praise for the assistance and advice given him and the cast by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. He and leading members of the cast made several visits to C.N.I.B. headquarters in Toronto and to the School for the Blind in Brantford, to learn how blind people cope with their work and studies, their attitudes to life, plans for the future, and how they use their other senses to make up for the one they have lost.

Almond says: "We discovered that in most cases you really can't tell that blind people have lost their sight, except when they're walking on strange ground. We noticed that they are much stiller than sighted people, more 'aware'."

Music figures prominently in the play because Braille also worked out a system for writing musical scores with dots. For scenes of Miss Maxwell at the piano the music

Education in the Ancient World. Education in Ancient Rome is the subject of today's talk by George Woodcock, who says he's often wondered how serious the ancient Romans were when they chose the word they used for a school. The word was ludus, which also means play or game. George Woodcock is Editor of the University of British Columbia quarterly, "Canadian Literature."

Fado. John Lerch presents what he calls a "fado sampler." Fado is music unique to Portugal and on a recent trip there, Mr. Lerch discovered there are different varieties, all of which he found unusually attractive in their own ways. Mr. Lerch is a freelance broadcaster who is now on the staff of Boston University.

ing that you'd pass him in the street and never notice him."

Casals played for the Kash children backstage at the concert hall, and on another occasion they went out to his attractive home, which is laid out and sheltered with great respect for the maestro's privacy.

Of Casals' wife, Martita, Kash says: "She's extremely beautiful and charming, about 24 or 25. It's so interesting to see her devotion to him—wiping his brow in that intense heat, seeing that he gets his pills, keeping his 'cello tuned. All this wonderful care has made it possible for him to do more travelling than he could otherwise attempt at his age.

"Mrs. Casals teaches at the Conservatory. It was opened four years ago, a direct result of the success of the first Festival Casals. They expected 30 pupils to start with, and got 125!

"Everybody is interested, now. During the Festival the government puts big TV sets in a downtown square in San Juan, so people who can't attend the concerts can see and hear them anyway. The square is packed with viewers every night for three weeks. The rural people are just as keen on music. A few weeks ago, over Christmas, the San Juan Symphony did a tour of the whole island."

Both Kash and Miss Forrester were greatly impressed by the Festival Orchestra. It was composed of men chosen by Alexander Schneider from key musicians across the States, many of them concert masters Miss Forrester had met on her tours.

Kash says he has "never heard the Oberon Overture by von Weber played better than it was there. The horns were magnificent. You'll see for yourself how contented and relaxed all the musicians were in some scenes filmed at the rehearsal. They have only one aim: to have fun and make good music."

came from an off-camera piano played by John Beckwith, Canadian composer and music critic. "The camera would focus on my hands as I felt for the keys," Miss Maxwell told us, "and then move to my face, for of course all musicians register their special feeling for the music in their facial expression, whether they can see or not."

Interpol. Richard Jackson is Director of Interpol and Assistant Commissioner of New Scotland Yard. During a recent visit to Montreal, he talked with Marion McCormick and described what Interpol is and its rights in extending investigations in different countries. He also offers a novel explanation for the cause of the apparent increase in juvenile crime in North America. Marion McCormick is the CBC's Morning Commentator in Montreal.

Temple Rubbing in Bangkok. "Temple rubbin" is becoming a tourist attraction in Bangkok, capital of Thailand. Many Europeans who are either living in Bangkok or visiting it try their hand at this, in competition with the local Siamese children. Joan Barberis was no exception when she spent some days there during a recent tour of the Far East. "Temple rubbin" consists of reproducing the carvings from Temple walls on rice paper—carvings which tell an old Buddhist legend. Joan Barberis is a Canadian freelance writer and broadcaster whose home is in Montreal.

Consumer Broadcast. Jean Morrison will be in her regular Thursday spot on Trans-Canada Matinee, with another topic of interest to consumers. Mrs. Morrison is an Ottawa housewife and mother of three children.

Budd Knapp Returns to Canada

does intend to see this one. "Usually one is rather shocked and depressed on seeing one's self," he explains, "but I saw the 'rushes' of this film and was actually pleased with them."

Never Take Sweets from a Stranger is set in eastern Canada, and is based on a series of crimes that did occur in Toronto a few years ago. No matter where he goes, Knapp never loses touch with things Canadian. In England he appeared in a stage play, The Gimmick, with Bernard and Barbara Braden, took part in a TV play, The Last Tycoon, produced by Ted Kotcheff, formerly of CBC Toronto (who was recently awarded a prize as the best producer in England), and played in a West End production of Roger the Sixth with a former CBC sound technician from Toronto. When he went to Hollywood in 1951 his link with Canada was producer Fletcher Markle, a Vancouver-born CBC radio drama pioneer.

Budd Knapp enjoyed his year and a half in Hollywood. The people with whom he appeared in films and on television—Frank Sinatra (in Johnny Concho), Tom Ewell (in The Great American Pastime), Ray Milland, Jack Benny, and the TV western stars—were "almost without exception hard-working, conscientious, nice guys. I can only think of one bum, and he wasn't really big." He prefers the "civilized competence" of England, however, to the "atmosphere of speed and efficiency" that is typical of Hollywood—"the feeling that you are working at producing a 'commodity' rather than working in 'theatre'."

Why, then, did Knapp leave England to return to Canada? There were two reasons, one prosaic and the other quite poetic: In the first place, actors' fees have not kept pace with living costs in England. In the second place Knapp found himself "longing for some good old Canadian bush, with pre-Cambrian lakes and Tom Thomson pines."

"The rural environment in England is lovely, but so much of it seems to be a backdrop from Constable." (By way of explanation—when one's hobby is bird-watching, the "rural environment" of the country where one is living becomes quite important.)

Why did Knapp decide to settle in Montreal, rather than Toronto, when he returned to Canada? It was, after all, in Toronto that he became established as one of Canada's leading radio actors, and most of his future radio and television work will still be in Toronto. In short, is not the idea of Budd Knapp living in Montreal rather like the idea of, say, Gratien Gélinas living in Toronto?

"Well," says Knapp, "Montreal is stimulating. It combines the old world and the new. It has style, it's bawdy and sophisticated, it has wonderful food, wine from France at 90 cents a bottle, and it's the focus of the exciting contradiction of two cultures."

"I lived in Toronto for years, and I have in that city warm associations and many friends, but it wasn't until I went back there that I realized fully that I was back in urban Canada. Montreal has something in common with London; Toronto has something in common with Los Angeles."

Knapp is excited by the continuing development of live theatre in Canada, for he admits that the stage excites him more than radio or television. Even in the pre-tele-

NATIONAL SCHOOL BROADCAST

"Shakespeare's Julius Caesar," first in a series of five broadcasts. Today—"Shakespeare and His Theatre." This program will deal with the unique nature of the theatre for which Shakespeare wrote — its strengths, weaknesses, and conventions. It will show how practical necessity forced Shakespeare to achieve much in his writing which is now achieved by production techniques.

The love scene between Lorenzo and Jessica in The Merchant of Venice will show how he transmuted the harsh light of day into golden moonlight with his poetry, and Duncan's approach to Inverness in Macbeth will give another example of the creation of atmosphere through diction and imagery.

The effect of short, rapid battle scenes will be discussed with reference to the last act of Julius Caesar, and some of the tradition of pageantry on the Elizabethan stage will be shown in connection with the many court scenes of the historical plays.

Recent scholarship has revealed that Elizabethan stage effects were considerably more elaborate and realistic than was once thought, and some of these will be described. Finally, the use of boys to play women's roles will be considered in relation to the peculiar, worldly charm of many of Shakespeare's women.

Possibly no one is happier to have Budd Knapp living in Montreal than Rupert Caplan, CBC Montreal's veteran radio drama producer. "I have the highest regard for Budd's ability and flexibility," says Caplan. "He possesses probably the most flexible voice in radio." Caplan then went on to recall the Victory Loan Shows which he produced for CBC during World War II. Many of these featured Budd Knapp playing important roles "opposite some pretty big-name stars" imported from Hollywood.

Here's Why I'm A Vegetarian

large amounts of toxic waste, the eliminatory organs such as the kidneys simply can't cope with the strain. What happens? Well, who doesn't know the answer to that one in the days following Christmas? And if you multiply those headaches, those stomach upsets, that colic, that biliousness, that diarrhoea by years and years of slow toxic poisoning, you'll have another reason why I'm a vegetarian.

Oh, and by the way . . . have you heard of the Hunza tribe? They live in a remote valley in Kashmir and are completely vegetarian in their diet. Their claim to fame is somewhat unusual nowadays—they're entirely free from the scourge of cancer. Do the toxic irritants from a meat diet cause tumours? Some research scientists think it's highly possible. I don't know, but it's quite a thought, isn't it?

And, after all, protein is merely one of our needs, one we can easily get without chewing up dead bodies. All the others, the carbohydrates, the fats, the vitamins and the minerals are found in most abundance in the vegetable kingdom. Was it mere size you were after? What about the elephant? Was it strength? What about the rhino or the gorilla? Was it endurance and staying power? What about the antelope or the ox? They're vegetarians all and couldn't tell a wiener from a frank.

Yet in a world of rapidly increasing population there's a much more urgent point to consider. If we balance out the number of people against the land capable of producing food, we find that each person would receive roughly one acre. A meat-eater requires two. Does that seem quite fair? It doesn't to me. In fact, he's obviously taking more than his share, while countless millions starve. On the other hand, the vegetarian needs only three-quarters of an acre. Need I say more . . . except, perhaps, in all humility to suggest how easily we could solve the world's food problems. And more than anything a full belly means a contented mind. Wouldn't this also be one way in which we could help eradicate the justifiable bitterness of the underprivileged multitudes of the world?

You may think that it's practically impossible to live in a meaty society and yet not eat meat. It's true there are times when awkward moments occur. There was the occasion in New Zealand when a new friend, who hadn't heard we were vegetarians, sent us a whole leg of lamb as a gesture of welcome. It was very embarrassing—particularly as it was so kind—and I remember we didn't get out of the predicament too graciously. But generally speaking people are quite willing to accept our peculiarities. They think we're witless and terribly deprived, of course, but thoughtfully provide mountains of macaroni cheese—which we detest—and load the festive board with strange, pseudo-vegetarian concoctions lifted anxiously from women's magazines published for the demi-monde.

We do eat eggs and cheese, of course, and with these, brown rice, lentils and nuts, we make a large variety of savoury dishes. There is, though, a group which calls itself the Vegan Society . . . these people eliminate all forms of animal produce and make a remarkably healthy diet without meat, fish, poultry, eggs, cheese, butter or milk. Strictly speaking, however, vegetarians exclude only those foods which require the killing of animals for their obtaining.

Perhaps, though, you think it's dangerous to health to do without meat? I'm not really a good example to quote, because I was 19 before I stopped eating it, but I'm pretty proud of my children. They're being brought up as vegetarians and have never had meat. How do they look? Well, my boy's 11, is a little over five feet tall and weighs 85 pounds. One girl is eight, is 4' 3½" tall and weighs 63 pounds, the other girl is nearly three, is 3' 3" and weighs 36 pounds. They're intelligent, wide-awake and healthy, have appetites which are ruinous to the family budget and so much energy it makes me tired just to watch them. Poor, deprived, undernourished orphans of the storm, you think? Why don't you call in and see them sometime?

So why am I a vegetarian? Because I think it's ethically wrong to breed animals simply to exploit their helplessness. Because the human body is unfitted for a carnivorous diet. Because the slaughter of animals tends to produce callousness in those who do the slaughtering. Because the proper nutrition of humanity can be achieved far more easily by the use of fruits, vegetables, cereals and nuts. Because the economics of world agriculture points to its absolute necessity; and because vegetarians have a proven higher standard of health and are less prone to disease than meat eaters. Are those enough reasons? I believe so.

FROM OUR MAILBAG

You Can't Please 'Em All!

• I want to congratulate you on the cover of your Christmas number. The picture of Florence Faiers, with a border of holly leaves is much nicer than the cartoon you have had on the Christmas issue of the Times for a good number of years, and I hope you will do it again.—B. G. Baldur, Man.

• There are no words to express the feeling of shock I experienced on receiving the Christmas issue of the CBC Times to find that the most sacred day of the year (next to Easter) was commemorated by placing on the front cover the picture of an individual in the entertainment world and relegating to the back cover—well out of sight—the stained glass window painting of the Christ Child, whose birthday the Christian world is supposed to be marking on Christmas Day.—Mrs. G. W., Calgary.

Ed. — The full-colour engravings used for printing our back cover were supplied to us by another publication. Had Christ been put on the front cover — and we will agree that this would have been most suitable—there would have been no room for the name of the publication, the date, or the newsstand price.

By the way, if the back cover is such an inconspicuous spot, why do advertisers pay thousands extra for advertisements on the back covers of public magazines?

Hamlet a Hit

• I feel I must congratulate the CBC on the outstanding production

Hamlet on your recent Wednesday night program.

I thought the acting was splendid, especially that of Peter Haword as Hamlet.

No doubt it will have been of great help to those students studying this particular drama.

Please keep up your excellent programming. — A. E., Winkler, Man.

Why Recipes?

• Much as I like the CBC Times, I have one beef. I do like to see recipes in magazines, but why in the CBC Times? I would much rather have talks or articles on performers or other people. — Mrs. J. S., Wimbome, Alta.

Ed.: Our recipes are published so that the many viewers of THREE'S COMPANY can conveniently receive a printed copy of the excellent recipes give on that program. We also think they are of considerable use in every household, being practical and economical.

Verdict Is Yours

• The Verdict Is Yours has caused several arguments and even a quarrel here as to whether it concerns authentic court cases. Can you give me information as to how and where this series is filmed? — Miss H. H., Hainsbury, Alta.

Ed.: It is an unrehearsed production, using professional lawyers as judge and counsel, with parties to the case played by actors. Columbia Broadcasting System films the series in its studios.
